

Ray Wagoner, M.S., LPC Supervision Agreement

Purpose of the Agreement:

This document is an agreement between the undersigned to enter a mutually agreed-upon relationship concerning counseling supervision in the Graduate Counseling program of John Brown University. Both parties have discussed the document, its considerations, and issues, and clarified misunderstandings from the content below.

Supervisor:

Ray Wagoner is a licensed professional counselor through the State of Arkansas. He has been a clinical practitioner and clinic manager. Before becoming a counselor, Ray served as a pastor in various locations and in various pastoral roles for 18 years. Ray sees clients ages 12 and up with diverse mental disorders and diagnoses. He specializes in men with hypersexual disorder, couples recovering from affairs or betrayal, women in abusive relationships, and young adults with insecure attachments resulting in depression and anxiety. Ray's theoretical disposition integrates Emotionally Focused Theory (Greenberg), Client-Centered Therapy (Rogers), Interpersonal Neurobiology/Psychology (Siegel, Thompson), and Interpersonal Psychotherapy (Yalom, Klerman & Weissman). These theories are integrated into a spiritual lens of Christian theology and worldview, creating a Christian-accommodating counseling and supervision weltanschauung.

Ray has supervised emerging counselors through the John Brown University graduate counseling program, the University of Arkansas's graduate counseling program, and the Liberty University graduate counseling program over the past 7 years. He has trained as a supervisor through Liberty University's PhD in Counselor Education and Supervision program, including coursework and internship. Ray desires to see his supervisees grow and develop into autonomous counselors in their own right. Using the same integration of Christian thought/spirituality and psychological theories mentioned above, Ray will follow a Discrimination model of supervision, combined with an Attachment-Caregiving model, to monitor and encourage supervisees' growth.

Special Conditions

As Ray is a student in Liberty University's PhD in Counselor Education and Supervision program and the supervisees are counselors in training in the John Brown University Graduate Counseling program, there are several considerations that apply in this specific circumstance.

One, there will be times when the sessions are recorded. These recordings will be used by the supervisor to obtain feedback from the supervisor's PhD faculty. These recordings will not be made public, and all HIPAA and FERPA requirements will be complied with, with due regard for the privacy of supervisees and their clients. The supervisees' clients, who may appear in the supervisees' own recorded cases, will not be identified and will be shown sparingly during the supervisor's presentation to his own class. The purpose of the recording is to assist the supervisor in training in skills necessary for the benefit of both the supervisor and the supervisee, and, by proxy, the supervisee's clients.

Second, the supervisee's general demographic information, academic history, and other relevant details may be shared with parties in the supervisor's PhD course. At no time will specific or identifying information be shared. The aim of sharing any information is for the sole purpose of obtaining relevant feedback from the supervisor's PhD faculty.

Terms of the Agreement:

The terms of the agreement between Ray Wagoner, supervisor, and _____, supervisee, begin on _____(MM/DD/YY) and continue until either party gives a verbal agreement to terminate. The terms of the dissolution of the agreement should be put in writing at that time for both parties' records. We agree to meet as scheduled by the supervisee for at least 1 clinical hour per scheduled session unless otherwise agreed upon. Sessions can be scheduled through Therapy Appointment (link in my initial email).

The nature of our relationship will include monitoring of client welfare through supervisee self-reports, teaching and practicing (through role-play and reviewing videoed sessions) therapeutic skills, providing verbal and written feedback and evaluations for the development of counseling skills and dispositions, and monitoring compliance with ACA ethical guidelines (for supervisor and supervisee), State of Arkansas criteria for licensure, and (for students) your institution's requirements for practicum/internship. These functions will be carried out through our varying roles as teacher/student, counselor/counselee, and consultant/peer. Over time, I will offer a continuum of support based on your need for direction and autonomy.

Written evaluations will be provided at mid-term and end of term through a form designed to scale and delineate development over time. If you are a student and require paperwork from your institution, please communicate those needs in advance so that I have the opportunity to provide appropriate feedback. Also, note that written or verbal feedback is most useful when accompanied by a video presentation of a live client session. Giving confident feedback without witnessing your skills and disposition in action is impossible. Therefore, we will make time during our sessions to review the most helpful portions of videos, which you will be responsible for managing.

At any time, should the supervisee determine that his/her supervisor is not acting in his/her best interest, maintaining a professional relationship and demeanor, setting and working toward goals through the models identified above, following ethical guidelines to the best of his ability, giving thoughtful and theoretically grounded feedback, and working toward an end goal of helping the supervisee develop into an autonomous counselor, the supervisee has the right to terminate the agreement and relationship. The supervisee should also know that no action will be taken in retaliation if the supervisee needs to report delinquency in any of the above facets of the relationship, or if the supervisee feels threatened or coerced by the supervisor in any way. Reporting the supervisor's actions to a clinical supervisor, institutional supervisor, or State Board representative is always within the supervisee's rights.

(As a note, liability insurance is maintained by both the Supervisor and the Supervisee.)

Consent and Confidentiality:

To protect your client relationships, you must ensure that your informed consent discloses your supervision relationship with me. Clients should also provide verbal consent before reviewing any cases in supervision. You should explain supervision, the necessary relationship with a supervisor, and the benefits of supervision for them during your initial intake procedures. You should also disclose and communicate that all HIPAA compliance will be ensured, and no personal data will be shared with your supervisor or records kept concerning individual clients outside of your practice and record-keeping procedures outlined in your informed consent.

Before recording any session with clients, you should obtain and file a signed agreement to record and review your sessions with your supervisor. This can be an addendum or a section of your informed consent.

I will not divulge the nature of our relationship to anyone at any time. The only limit to this agreement is if I feel you pose a threat to yourself or others. If this is the case, I must communicate this concern to the proper authorities, those who are being threatened, and others who can provide appropriate care including the leadership of JBU Graduate Counseling Department. One helpful way to keep our relationship confidential is to eliminate social media from my life. I only use LinkedIn and will connect with you through this service for professional purposes.

Emergencies:

If you encounter a client in crisis, follow your clinic's guidelines and work with the clinic manager or faculty director to ensure your safety and the client's safety: call 911 first, report child or elder endangerment or neglect to the appropriate State authorities, and notify me of the situation.

Tele-Supervision:

On occasion, we will use a virtual platform for tele-supervision. I currently use Zoom with waiting rooms recorded to my computer hard drive with supervisees, as it complies with HIPAA and ACA (2005) ethical guidelines.

Issues to consider in tele-supervision include: 1) ensuring the supervisor is aware of your location and emergency contact information, 2) maintaining a secure and confidential connection and environment while the session is in process, 3) plans to reconvene should the internet connection be disconnected without the possibility of reconnection over a short period (15 minutes) should be made before the session, and 4) consent to record these sessions is part of this agreement and you have acknowledged this by initialing here ____, however, in keeping with the above sections, the recordings will only be shared for educational purposes and no personal information or data will be shared.

Other considerations:

1) I prefer using email to communicate all forms of information. This is the best way to ensure all parties' data is encrypted and confidential. 2) As such, texting is appropriate for communication about scheduled sessions, difficulty scheduling sessions, or notifying me of an emergency if I do not answer a phone call (these texts should not include the nature of the emergency or personal information or data about clients), 3) you should be aware that phone conversations cannot be guaranteed as confidential and therefore should send emails or defer to in-person supervision or tele-supervision sessions for discussing private and confidential topics.

Agreement:

This supervision agreement is subject to revision upon review and reconsideration by either the supervisor or the supervisee. We both agree to adhere to the details of this agreement to the best of our ability during the relationship. In keeping with the ACA code of ethics, the expectations of our respective clinics, and the institutions we represent, we agree to the terms, directives, and provisions in this agreement.
