

VIDEO PRESENTATION: ORAL CASE PRESENTATION FOR INDIVIDUAL/TRIADIC/GROUP SUPERVISION

Supervisees: (AC)

A. Personal data of supervisees

AC is a student intern in John Brown University's Graduate Counseling program. AS is in her final semester and will graduate in May. AC is interning at two sites: the JBU Community Counseling Clinic, run by the Grad Counseling program, and an additional site with which JBU collaborates. As a result, AC has two site supervisors. I also provided site supervision for AC two semesters ago during their practicum. The video in the presentation is from our second supervision session together. We are still building rapport, but the fact that we had practicum supervision seems helpful. AC is not anxious about supervision, but she has several clients who present with issues outside of her comfort zone. She has expressed a desire to be helpful but doubts that she can apply the theory correctly. Our supervision will focus on the essentials of counseling skills, rather than on theoretical interventions.

B. Summary of individual/triadic/group supervision history

This was our second session. We are normally a triad, but the second student was unavailable for this meeting. AC had 3 goals for this session: 1) to conceptualize the client's care from her theoretical perspective and receive feedback on helpful interventions from a cognitive framework, 2) to provide ideas for guiding the client to set their own goals, and 3) to help interpret the client's body language.

The session was held via Zoom because the weather prevented travel. After the initial check-in and communication about the virtual meeting and privacy, AC discussed the client's case and demographics. AC gave a verbal overview of the session in question before showing a video. AC was enthusiastic about the process but anxious about certain aspects of the case. She reported feeling less confident in the population and a desire to read the client's body language, which appeared to her as a flat affect.

I would like to show the end of the supervision session from 42:00-52:00, as I clarified and discussed a suicide assessment and asked for a reflection of emotion, and encouraged her own clarification of the emotion in the moment. 45: 30 I provided feedback on interventions, body language, and goals that helped the supervisee recognize her strengths and abilities in listening well. My feedback was intended to help the supervisee build confidence and learn how to answer the questions that come up with every client.

C. Solicit feedback from group

1. What is your overall assessment of the session? Was my rapport with her appropriate and helpful? Did I attend to her concerns with empathy and skill?

2. Was the feedback I gave her sufficiently open to allow her to develop her own ideas?
Did I give advice or guide her to her own thoughts?
